Zoe's Take on Life: Saliva, Sentiments, and STD's

Zoe Marcum
Reporter Ahhh, the sweet smell of dopamine and cheap flowers. This is Valentine's Day, by far the worst "holiday" of them all. It singles out the singles and was only made for profit, a literal "Hallmark Holiday". Believe it or not, I am going to try not to tear this ushy, gushy, gooey holiday too much, but I am still going to tell you about the good, the sad, and the disgusting parts of this holiday.

THE GOOD: I am just going to cut to the chase here. Free. Food. Is there really any more for me to say? Free food is by far the best food and not to mention most of the time it is candy so even better! Or if you have a secret admirer they might get you a stuffed animal, roses, or even say that they love you and have been waiting so long to meet you and that they know where you live and what you do at home ... but that is crazy talk. Hey, if you do this stop. It is weird. No one likes a stalker.

THE SAD: People all around the world tell their crush that they like them on Valentine's Day only to get their feelings completely obliterated. My motto is "why try when you don't have to." To save yourself from the raging hormones, just keep your feelings in and never let them out. Never. Trust me, they are safer that way. Some people wait to tell their significant other that "it is just not working out, sorry" on Valentine's Day. I knew people could be mean but holy matrimony, that is some next level baloney right there.

THE DISGUSTING: I am sure you know how much PDA is in our school already. Do you know how much there is going to be on Valentine's Day? A whole lot more. Everyone will be suffering, except the ones who are committing this crime. Did I just call PDA a crime? Yes, yes I did. The worst part is that it is probably worse in other schools. I would not want to be a teacher because all day I would be prying teenagers faces off of each other. Gross. If you are going to smash faces at school, at least try to hide it. No one likes it but you.

In conclusion Valentine's Day is just another excuse for people to share saliva, sentiments, and STDs.

HOW TO BE SINGLE ON VALENTINE'S DAY

Cas Palazzolo
Photo Editor February is a time for love, cheap cards, and messy breakups. These moments are why I prefer being single on Valentine's Day.

Do not get me wrong, there are many good reasons to be in a relationship on Valentine's Day, but there are even more reasons to be by yourself. For example, there are no expectations to meet in order to impress anyone. You can stay at home and do whatever you want instead of wearing an uncomfortable suit or dress and going to a tasteless restaurant. As a bonus, there is no chance of an argument leading to a relationship-ending day.

The day after, you can also buy lots of candy at a discounted price, instead of shipping it off in a cardboard heart to someone who will likely toss it in the trash the next day. Valentine's Day is also a "Hallmark Holiday", created entirely by a for-profit organization. Sure, it originated as a religious event, but just like Christmas, the whole idea has been commercialized and simplified to "buy a card from us to show your love!" When you think about it, being single is a great way to "take a stand" against corporate greed.

Even more so, there is enough stress already with the new semester in school for students; there is no reason to add more anxiety by wondering if you bought your significant other the right gift or candy. Just kick back, relax, and start obsessing over your grades like a good student, rather than obsessing over your partner!

Finally, here is a good tip: rather than spending your time trying to find someone else, just take a "me" day and find yourself! Do something that you enjoy that you do not get to do very often, or even take the day off and just relax; your mental health is more important than finding your soulmate.

Enjoy your time doing what you like to do to relax such as reading a book, playing video games, spending time with friends, or binge watching an entire series of Netflix.
